"To sentence a person to life without the opportunity to make amends for the pain and suffering he or she has caused, or the opportunity to be a productive member of the community, is cruel."

- Person currently serving LWOP

"Ending life without parole brings hope to a system. Sends message that we don't give up on people. People can change."

- Person currently serving LWOP

Massachusetts has the highest percentage of people serving life without parole sentences in the nation, followed by Louisiana. As of July 26, 2021, 1,013 people in Massachusetts are serving LWOP out of less than 6,000 criminally sentenced people in DOC custody. This means that one out of every six people incarcerated in Massachusetts state prisons is foreclosed from the opportunity to ever apply for parole.

LEGISLATIVE BRIEFING: ENDING LIFE WITHOUT PAROLE

Continued

Of the people serving LWOP, 600, or 59%, are BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, and people of color) though only 28% of the Massachusetts population are BIPOC. Also known as “slow death row,” this sentence strips people of their hope and denies the human capacity to change. LWOP sentences waste taxpayer dollars and do not actually promote public safety.

Please join us on October 14th at 12:00pm to learn about An Act to Reduce Mass. Incarceration (H1797) which would allow all people serving life sentences the opportunity for a parole hearing after serving 25 years.
